Scott Eblin is the co-founder and president of The Eblin Group, Inc., a leadership development and strategy firm that supports organizations in ensuring the success of their executive level leaders. Through his work as an executive coach, leadership strategist, speaker and author, Scott has become known as a thought leader in identifying the behaviors that executives need to pick up and let go as they transition into new and larger roles.

Featured on ABC News and in Investor's Business Daily, the Washington Post and Harvard Management Update, Scott is a former Fortune 500 executive, with a leadership development client list that runs the gamut from Astra Zeneca to the U.S. Navy. He is the author of The Next Level: What Insiders Know About Executive Success which Business Book Review calls a "fascinating read" that "is full of potentially career-saving advice."

As a former executive himself, Scott knows the demanding expectations and challenges his clients face. He coaches busy, successful leaders in what he calls the "school of real life™" to help them identify the strengths they can build on along with the vital few opportunities that will help them be even better. Scott is an innovator in the field of coaching who has worked with hundreds of clients in individual and group engagements that yield measurable and significant improvements in leadership effectiveness.

Scott is an honors graduate of Davidson College and holds a masters degree in public administration from Harvard University. He has a certificate in leadership coaching from Georgetown University and is a member of the faculty for that program. Scott also holds the designation of Professional Certified Coach from the International Coach Federation.

He blogs regularly on leadership "news you can use" at the Next Level Blog (www.scotteblin.com) and writes the Executive Coach column for Government Executive magazine's web site (www.govexec.com). Visit www.eblingroup.com to learn more about The Eblin Group.
